The inerrancy of Scripture

- The Bible itself claims to be perfect
(Psalm 12:6, 19:7, Prov 30:5)
- The Bible stands or falls as a whole
- The Bible is a reflection of its Author
(2 Tim 3:16)
- The Bible judges us, not vice versa
(Heb 4:12, Rom 9:20)
- The Bible's message must be taken as a whole
(Psalm 119:89)
- The Bible is our only rule for faith and practice
(John 6:67-69)

The original manuscripts of the Bible are inerrant: they do not affirm anything contrary to fact.

Inerrancy does not mean scientific precision; it means truthfulness.

The objections raised to the doctrine of inerrancy suffer in a number of ways. Some fail to account for the claims of the text, some fail to account for the omnipotent power of God, and some simply allege error where none exists.

The doctrine of inerrancy is critical to studying Scripture in an attempt to understand its claims and to trust in God.
